Many cancer patients are worried about the effect of cancer treatments such as radiotherapy and chemotherapy on their fertility. Australian researchers at Melbourne's Monash University and Prince Henry Institute of Medical Research have discovered a potential way of safeguarding egg cells in the ovaries. Cancer treatments rely on biopsies—the removal of cells or tissue for examination by a pathologist—for definitive diagnosis. Biopsies are invasive, sometimes to the point of requiring surgery. They make a career on the edge of both art and science. At Gibbs Cancer Center & Research Institute , two dietitians also play a role in the fight against cancer. Cathy Zwilling, MS, RD, CSO, LDN, and Melissa Julian, RD, CSO, LDN, are experts in oncology nutrition .
